MISCELLANEOUS READING. COMMENICATED.

DAVID. (Lovingly inscribed to little Willie C. H.

BY SARAH J. C. WHITTLESEY. We're gladsome boys, new, David, No shadows in our way;

We're sporting on life's oasis— Childhood's fair boliday; No thorus are in our path, David, Among the moss and flowers; We tread the soundless velvet turf, Through sweet and sun-bright hours.

We think the green spot wide, David,
We're rambling o'er to-day;
The emerald edge of childhood's years,
Seems penciled far away;
We'll reach the verge, ere long, David,
If life's warm pulse beats on,
And from the boundary-line look back,
At all the long arone.

At all the long agone!

We'il see full many a golden spot, And many a lovely bloom, We're passing, now, all beedlessly, In gladness, on to gloom! We long, in childhood, now, David,

For manhood's coming hours;

We'll yearn, in manhood's struggling years, For childhood's birds and flowers! Our paths may lead apart, David, Along the plain of Time,

But they'll converge, and we will meet, At life's low ve-per chime; A father waits above, David, To meet me on the share;

I shall not fear to cross the sea, That he has crossed before. No matter what our fates, David, In future years may be, If, when the resciences of our lives, Are shattered from the tree,

And Karth's December days are passed, And all its shadows gray, We wake, together, up in Heaven's Unending boliday. Alexandria, Virginia.
